It's a sequel/gentle reboot of the 1996 film The Craft. Plot A group of high school students forms a caga of witch. Why it sucks like black Christmas (2019), the movie tries really hard to wake up, especially in the movie's final act: The characters often drop SJW buzzwords. The head of the movie is an unsbtle misogynist who killed a bisexual boy for being weak. In addition, he has no true depth. There's a rather bizarre scene where the girls use their magic on a bully, and he suddenly wakes up. There are a lot of plot points that appear to be ripped from the 2019 Black Christmas film. Unlike the original movie, the characters here are all bland and have no real development. We never really know any of their background, so we can't really care about them. Also unlike the original movie, there's not much magic used. The movie really feels rushed: There are a lot of plot holes and things that just never really get explained. A number of subplots are raised and then never solved. For a horror movie, there's not much scary, and it feels more like a teen drama. Cheap and unconvincing special effects. Overall, the movie just doesn't have the tone and cult charm of the original film. The Only Redeeming Quality Fairuza Beam makes a cameo at the end playing Nancy from the original film. Reception reviews were mixed to negative, with a 47% critic rating and 32% audience rating on Rotten Tomatoes. Lily Schechner moves into town with her therapist mother Helen to live with Helen's new husband Adam Harrison and his three sons, Jacob, Isaiah and Abe. The girls befriend Lily after she has her period in class and is mocked by her other classmates, especially Timmy. They're surprised when she's telekinetically pushing Timmy into the lockers. When Lily responds to them using just her thoughts, the girls confirm her to be their fourth member and invite her to join their covenant, to which she agrees. As a result, they manage to freeze time. To get revenge on Timmy, the girls cast a spell on him. The next day, Timmy acts sensitively and confirms the girls' success. They are still experimenting with their powers, including levity. When Adam discovers about the incident in school, he slims Lily, but Helen defends her. Lily hears them argue and goes outside where Abe talks to her about his father's authoritarian beliefs. Timmy hosts a party, invites the covenant, and apologizes to Lily, eventually friends with the covenant. When Timmy is at Lily's house for a project with Jacob, he admits to the girls that he had sex with Isaiah, Jacob's older brother, and that he is bisexual. Later, Lily places a love play on Timmy, using his sweatshirt, and the two kisses. The next morning, during class, the covenant is told by their teacher that Timmy allegedly committed suicide the night before. Lily opens up to her friends about her kissing and love spells. They cheating ties with and bind themselves to magic. Lily suspects Adam is dangerous and asks her mother for them to move out, but she disagrees. In hopes of countering anything she searches his office only to find her own adoption papers while Helen admits to her that Lily is actually her patient's child. After Timmy's funeral, Helen tells Lily his voice to move out. She also admits knowing about her powers and asking her to give her powers. When Lily suspects her, Helen forms and appears to be a disguise by Adam, who, being part of a pagan cult, has been to her powers since the beginning and knocked her unconscious. Lily awakens in a bush at night with Adam, who confesses to murdering Timmy and threatening to kill her, too. When Timmy contacts Lily's friends and tells them about his murder by a Ouija board, they arrive to save Lily by freezing time, but Adam quickly subdues them. The girls then work together and use their elemental powers to defeat Adam and burn him to death. Later, Lily continues her friendship with the girls and Helen takes her to an asylum to meet her birth mother, who is revealed to be Nancy Downs.
